

Incorporating Sources into Your Paper

Each direct quotation, paraphrase, or summary should be integrated into your paper with a transition. Do not simply “dump” one into your paragraph. Compare the following examples:

“Dumped” quotation	Many people believe that the residents of homeless shelters are just lazy and unmotivated, but such a view is much too simplistic. “Most people who end up in homeless shelters are suffering from schizophrenia, clinical depression, or post traumatic stress syndrome.”
Quotation with transition	Many people believe that the residents of homeless shelters are just lazy and unmotivated, but such a view is much too simplistic. According to a recent study by Daniel Moriarty, a Stanford psychologist, “Most people who end up in homeless shelters are suffering from schizophrenia, clinical depression, or post traumatic stress syndrome.”
“Dumped” paraphrase	Many people believe that the residents of homeless shelters are just lazy and motivated, but such a view is much too simplistic. Many of them are suffering from serious mental and emotional disorders.
Paraphrase with transition	Many people believe that the residents of homeless shelters are just lazy and unmotivated, but such a view is much too simplistic. According to a recent study by Daniel Moriarty, a Stanford psychologist, many of them are suffering from serious mental and emotional disorders.